

Corporate Profile

Toshiba Digital Solutions Division

Toshiba Digital Solutions Division (DSD) provides small- to medium-size businesses with the highest quality business communication systems, featuring best-in-class modularity, migration capabilities, and reliability. With the IP-enabling of our two top-selling, feature-rich product lines — the Strata CTX digital business telephone system and Strata CS communication server — Toshiba reaffirms its commitment to building technology that adapts to the needs of today's enterprise.

As an operating division of Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc., DSD is backed by Toshiba Corp., a world leader in high technology and integrated manufacturing of electrical and electronic components, products, and systems. Founded in 1875, Toshiba Corp. boasts overall revenues of $47 billion and is comprised of 300 subsidiaries and affiliates worldwide.

Toshiba Products

Toshiba's Strata CTX family of digital business telephone systems, Strata CS communication server, and Strategy voice processing systems are widely known for their quality and reliability. Additionally, we added IP telephony capabilities to the Strata CTX and introduced our first IP telephone.

Toshiba's Strata CTX Version 2.0 software integrates IP capabilities into the Strata CTX line, allowing creation of a hybrid communication solution that meets an enterprise's specific needs. Digital, analog, and IP telephones can be "mixed and matched" as needed, at both main office and remote locations.

Toshiba's new IP telephone — the Toshiba IPT1020-SD — extends Strata CTX capabilities to remote locations supported by an IP network. Used over a company LAN or with home broadband connections (DSL/cable), the IPT1020-SD offers features not typically found in IP phones. These include Busy Lamp Field display of other station status; background music played over phone speakers; paging over speakers; off-hook call announce over phone handset; from a remote location, intercom capabilities with the main office.

Why Toshiba Products Should Be Your First Choice
